Industrial World's Economic Pulse Beating More Strongly U.S. Employment Rise Is Called a Positive Indicator

OECD Forecasts Rosy Conditions for 2 More Years

By Carl Gewirtz International Herald Tribune

PARIS - A year that many economists had feared would be badly scarred by the October 1987 stock market collapse is ending with conditions "more bhoyant than at any time since the early 1970s" and with rosy prospects through 1990, according to the OECD. Each of the economic temperature readings taken this year — in April and September by the International Monetary Fund and in June by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and De-

Organization for Economic Cooperation and De-velopment — has been more upbeat than the previous readings. The OECD analysis of its 24 member countries, prepared for the Nov. 14-15 meeting of its Eco-nomic Policy Committee, continues this trend. Its upward revision from the September IMF projec-tion is rather modest compared with the substan-tial informament from the series forecasts. tial improvement from the spring forecasts. The study also extends the forecast horizon to 1990 and sees a continuation of the longest postwar expansion. While ruling ont an imm recession, feared by some economists, the report does forecast that the pace of growth will be slowing.

The main threat to this outlook is a resurgence of inflation or a sudden difficulty in financing persistent current account deficits, most notably that of the United States. To head off these potential problems, the OECD urges renewed fiscal

The report said that in countries where budget tightening is called for, the tightening should begin promptly.

The study attributes the improved outlook to the fall in oil prices, increased confidence that inflation will be contained and a restoration of profits and financial positions of many companies. Private investment "seems likely to increase al-most 11 percent this year," up from 8.5 percent last year, "an indication that 'animal spirits' have been raised in most OECD countries."

All countries, even those who are not members of the OECD, should share in this improved outlook since the organization sees world trade ex-See ECONOMY, Page 15

WASHINGTON -- Mnre than 300.000 workers were added to business payrolls in October as the U.S. civilian unemployment rate slipped to 5.3 percent, the government said Friday, signaling that the economy was far more robust than recent data had indicated

The unemployment rate reported by the Labor Department matched June's figure, which was the lowest in 14 years.

The last major economic report to be issued before next week's U.S. presidential election was hailed by Republicans. President Ronald Reagan, leaving the White House to campaign for Vice President George Bush, said the report was "very, very good news for all Americans."

"The future is hright and it's getting brighter," Mr. Reagan said. "Nothing's going to stop us now.

The dollar shot up on the report, in anticipation of an increase in interest rates by the Federal Reserve Board to cool off the economy and hold down inflation.

However, other financial markets initially reacted negatively on fears of an interest rate increase. Stock and bond prices fell. On the New York Stock

"The jobs figures are an impressive sign of the underlying pace of momentum in the economy and cast druht on the slower growth that was suggested by August and September data," Stephen Roach, an economist at Morgan Stanley & Co., told Reu-

Moscow left open the option of extending the postponement be-yond the Feh. 15 deadline for completing the removal of Russian troops. [The White House press secre-tary, Marlin Fitzwater, said the Soviet action could "only increase tensions in the region and raise speculation that they aren't going to live up to the Geneva accords, The Associated Press reported.]

Alexander A. Bessmertnikh, a deputy Soviet foreign minister, said the withdrawal was heing delayed because of the worsening military situation. The withdrawal began on May 15, paused on Aug. 15 and was expected to resume later this month.

He said at a news conference, "The Soviet Union intends to carry out its obligations under the Gene-va accords." The accords call for completion of the withdrawal by Feb. 15.

But he added, "For the obliga-tions under the Geneva accords to be carried out, the Geneva accords must be effective and be observed by all sides."

The remarks, which Mr. Bess-mertnikh offered in response to questions and were not contained in a written statement be read first, suggested that Moscow might de-lay withdrawal beyond the Feb. 15 deadline.

[President Ronald Reagan, asked about the Soviet statement. said, "We are all disappointed by that," The Associated Press report-ed, He added, "At the same time, I think we should recognize that this is something they have said is nec-essary and they have repledged to hring the troops out by Feb. 15." [When asked if the United States escalation of Soviet military activi-ty, seemed clearly intended to underscore Moscow's determination not to yield the battlefield or the Afghan government to guerrillas or their supporters in the next few months.

Mr. Bessmertnikh said Moscow was also replacing some Soviet units whose tour was expiring, and was providing the fresh troops with more advanced weapons. In addition, he said, the Soviet union was supplying the Afghan military with more powerful weapons, including short-range missiles. The United States in recent days reported, and protested, the deployment in Afghanistan of ad-vanced MiG-27 jet fighters, air raids by Soviet Backfire bombers and the firing hy the Afghan Army of short-range Soviet missiles.

Mr. Bessmertnikh said the steps announced were necessary, in part, because Pakistan, with American support, was continuing to aid the rebels. Guerrilla military activity, See AFGHAN, Page 2

New Yorker Who Shot Muggers Fled Drug Sentencing

NEW YORK - As Anthony Dixon, be was a hardworking cook, a churchgoing Christian and a concerned relative who sent money to his family in Ismaica.

As Clovis Fearon, be pleaded guilty to selling cocaine to undercover police officers and then spent 18 months on the run.

The two lives converged Thursday in a Brooklyn courtroom when the man, who fired his unlicensed .38-caliber revolver at two muggers, killing one, outside his apartment Tuesday night, was ordered to jail.

It was the latest twist in what the police had described as a good samaritan case. Now investigators are trying to untangle the mystery of the man who identified himself as Anthony Dixon after the shooting hut whose fingerprints revealed him to be Clovis Fearon, a fugitive in a drug case.

The police say they know little about the 29year-old Jamaican-born man. Even his real name is an open question. The Brooklyn District Attorney's office first said it was Fearon, then Fearom. His lawyer, Paul Ascher, said it was Fearon.

Mr. Ascher said he did not know why Clovis Fearon had abandoned his old neighborhood and his old identity and had become Anthony Dixon instead of going to court to be sentenced in the crack-selling case. Mr. Fearon had been promised a one-day jail term and five years' probation. His new Brooklyn neighborhood, East Flatbush, was less than two miles (3.2 kilometers) from his old home in Flatbush. It was in East Flatbush that he heard a mugging victim's screams on Tnesday night and raced out of his apartment, unlicensed revolver in hand.

He fired three times, hitting each assailant once. One, Raymond Plowden, 25, collapsed and died less than a block away. Police said he died clutching the mugging victim's watch and gold chain. Timothy Lewis, 25, fled and was arrested a short time later when he hobbled into a nearby hospital, bleeding from a wound in the back.

The police said Mr. Fearon fired without questioning the two men as they were robhing Gerturde George, 43, who was returning home from work about 11 P.M.

On the streets of the neighborhood, where residents say assaults are increasingly common, Mr. Fearon, known as Anthony Dixon, was immediately hailed as a hero.

"It was the right thing to do," a man said as he stood on the corner where the mugging and shootings had taken place. "It was the only way to stop them. People who roh people should be shot." Like many others in the neighborhood, the man refused

The center, if not in collapse, is in retreat. Both the right-of-center Likud hloc and the Labor Party lost parliamentary seats to smaller parties on their ideological flanks. Smaller parties that sought to build moderate constituencies, such as the new Meimad religious party, were virtually wiped out. Others saw a different division.

The real story of the election, they maintained, is the marriage between the ultrareliginus and the ultranationalistic, and the domination of these two radical forces over what was once Israel's political mainstream --- the Western-oriented, humanistic Zinnism of the country's founding fathers.

Did Soviets Shift to Defensive Strategy? NATO Has Doubts

By Bernard E. Trainor

New York Tunes Service BERLIN - Despite recent Soviet assertions that the Warsaw Pact has adopted a purely defen-sive strategy and is cutting back its military forces, recent maneuvers in East Germany showed that Soviet forces continue to stress mass tank attacks and other offensive operations.

The maneuvers were characterized by a Sovie general on the scene as defensive, but NATO officers observing the exercise said they saw no evidence to substantiate that assertion.

Soviet and other Warsaw Pact officers at the maneuver site went out of their way to say that the new defensive doctrine announced in March by the Sevict leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, was fully accepted by all members of the pact, but that it takes time to see concrete changes. To illustrate the point, the head of the tactics branch of the East German Military Academy cited major changes made in the school's curricuhum to stress defensive operations. "But it will be a while before these changes reach all the soldiers in the field," he said.

Western military experts at the maneuvers who heard the Soviet assertion were skeptical, but said they recognized the technical difficulty of instituting major changes in a military alliance as large as the Warsaw Pact.

The experts also agreed that Soviet willingness to permit Western observers and an American journalist at the maneuvers showed a new Soviet openness and willingness to improve relations with the West. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact have agreed to allow military observers to attend each other's maneuvers

NATO observers said it was unclear how much resistance to Mr. Gorbachev's new defense posture exists within the Soviet military hierarchy. But most said they thought Mr. Gorbachev was serious about changing military policy. He has said he is cutting back on military spending as part of the restructuring of the Soviet economy and be-cause of his desire to concentrate on domestic proble

A senior British officer attached to NATO who was in East Germany to observe the maneuvers said: "He has to cut military investment if he is going to make perentroika work and he must make perestroika work if he is going to survive." Io the meantime, NATO officers said, the maneuver grounds near Magdeburg, where the Soviets conduct many of their large armor exercises, is 40 kilometers (25 miles) from the West German border and the Warsaw Pact is still capable of launching an attack into West Germany with little warning

Soviet and East German officers scoff at that, saying Western lears of a Warsaw Pact attack are nded because the Warsaw Pact is a defensive alliance formed only because of a NATO threat to Eastern Europe.

They also deny superiority in conventional forces over NATO. The two treaty organizations, those officers say, are roughly equal in overall strength.

According to an annual report just published by the authoritative London-based International In-stitute of Strategic Studies, there have been no significant changes in Soviet force structure or weapons production rates over the last year to indicate the Warsaw Pact is modifying its strategy. Soviet equipment modernization and production continues, the report says, and the Warsaw Pact's main battle tanks outnumber those of NATO by 2 to 1.

U.S. intelligence officials say the Soviets pro-duce 200 to 300 such tanks a month, enough to equip 12 new tank divisions a year.

Warsaw Pact officers agree that their alliance has an advantage in tanks and artillery. But they say that is more than offset by NATO superiority in attack aircraft, anti-tank weapons, and naval forces.

"Both sides think the worst about the other," said General Peter Herreich of East Germany. This only underlines the need to allay mutual fears by reducing conventional forces on both sides." Talks on conventional arms reductions in Europe are expected to take place early next year.

Discussions with Warsaw Pact officials in East Germany suggest that there may be more than the economic burden of military spending behind the new conciliatory Soviet military policy. High-tech-nology weapons being developed in the West appear to threaten the underpinnings of Soviet conventional military doctrine.

Soviet military operations are planned on a grand scale.

Huge artillery bombardments are designed to soften defenses so that waves of armored units can encircle and annihilate the enemy in a relentless series of decisive battles.

That Soviet concept of military operations has changed little since World War IL The great offensives against Nazi Germany continue to dominate Soviet military thinking. To conduct warfare on the scale envisaged by Soviet doctrine requires very large forces, many thousands of tanks and effective command and control systems, all of which are increasingly vulnerable to NATO's growing inventory of high-technology weapons systems. In time, the advanced weapons systems could do to Soviet offensive tactics what the machine gun did to the cavalry charge. Using technologies like satellites, remotely pilot-ed vehicles and thermal imaging, targets ranging from tanks to command posts can be observed and targeted deep within Warsaw Pact territory.

Arab Newspaper in Israel Publishes 4 Plan for an Independent Palestine

JERUSALEM (AP) — A daily newspaper that backs the Palestine Liberation Organization published on Friday a draft declaration of independence for a Palestinian state that it said would be submitted for approval to the Palestine National Council.

The Arab-language Al Fair said that the document would be presented to the 453-member council on Nov. 14 in Algeria. The PLO considers the council to be its parliament in exile.

A map accompanying the document showed much of present-day Israel to be divided into two states, one Israeli and one Arab, on the basis of the 1947 United Nations partition resolution, the newspaper said. Israel rejects the partition plan.

In another development, the General Assembly overwhelmingly con-demned Israel on Thursday for killings, woundings, beatings, deporta-tions and other allegations of violating the human rights of Palestinians in the occupied territories. Number of Homeless Is Contested suffered a broken nose after joining the skirmish. The program, for ABC, was entitled "Teen Hatemongers." Mr.

Innis, 54, had been called an "Uncle Tom" by John Metzger, 20, of the White Aryan Resistance Youth. The police said there no other injuries and no arrests were made.

Institute concludes that the number of homeless people in the United States is 567,000 to 600,000. That is far lower than estimates by some advoca-ey groups but substantially higher than the 250,000 to 350,000 estimated in a 1984 report hy the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The number of homeless in the United States has been bitterly disputed. The department was sharply criticized by advocacy groups as deliberately trying to understate the problem of bomelessness, Richard Freeman, a Harvard University professor who estimated in 1986 that there were 350,000 homeless, based on his own study, was also criticized.

Maria Foscarinis, Washington counsel for the National Coalition for the Homeless, said Thursday, "No one can present an accurate count; all we can do is estimate." She said the Urban Institute figure was "probably a low estimate; our estimate is three million."

Mitch Snyder, head of the Community for Creative Non-Violence in Washington, said that "just about everybody in America who is involved" believed the figure was two million to three million.

Martha Burt, co-author of the new study with Barbara Cohen, said they had conducted an exten-sive survey of more than 400 soup kitchens and homeless shelters in the largest cities, including New York and Los Angeles. The results, adjusted for less frequent use in suburbs and nonmetropolitan areas, were then projected nationally.

The Urban Institute study, financed by the Agriculture Department's Food and Nutrition Service, included more than 1,700 interviews with homeless users of soup kitchens or shelters. It found that 81 percent of the homeless were male, 54 percent nonwhite and 51 percent between 31 and 50 years

A fifth of those interviewed had been homeless for more than four years, but the median period of homelessness was 10 months. About a fifth received some form of government income support, and a quarter had worked for pay during the last month. About 75 percent of the homeless were single or unattached adults, 15 percent were chil-dren and 8 percent adults related to the children.

The survey found that 20 percent had been in mental hospitals, a similar proportion had tried to commit suicide and about half were rated as being in severe emotional distress based on a standard scale measuring depression and demoralization.

About a quarter had been convicted of serious crimes and a third had been patients in a detoxification or alcohol-drug treatment center.

More than half had health problems such as high blood pressure, difficulty in walking and joint problems.

A new and more accurate model for death certificates has been developed by the National Center for Health Statistics, a federal agency, and is expected to be adopted by all 50 states. Death certificates provide the most widely used data for shaping health policy, but recent studies show frequent inaccuracies. The new form will make it easier for an attending physician to revise the listed cause of death if he disagrees with the diagnosis of the physician who pronounced the patient dead but who may have been less familiar with the case.

OPINION

Don't Read Too Much Into the Vote in Israel

to join Likud as junior partner in a grand coalition

(in which the prime ministership remains Likud's). For this to work, the Labor leader. Shimon Peres, would have to step down. The Labor defense minister, Yitzhak Rabin, would stay on. And the religious parties would be frozen out, to the relief of the two main parties. Mr. Shamir's trump is that if Labor refuses, he goes back to the religious parties and forms a narrow government with them alone.

Whether the government that emerges is broad or narrow, this election, which analysts had been call-ing the most decisive in Israel's history because it would decide the future of the occupied territories.

will deside nothing. It may decide whether soccer matches are allowed on Sabbath. Not much more,

The reason is simple. The Palestinian uprising has presented Israel with a security problem only.

The Palestinians have failed to transform it into a foreign policy challenge. They have offered Israelis no opportunity to seize. Shimon Peres could offer the electorate an attitude toward peace, but not a minimally plansible road map for getting there. The Palestinians have to say two things: that they

POLLS SHOW DUKAKIS CAN'T WIN, WHO ARE YOU VOTING FOR ?

A POLL! NOW THAT

Israelis want Likud to hold the fort, not to remake it.

WASHINGTON - Everyone from Ronald Reagan to Yasser Arafat wanted the Labor Party to win this week's Israeli election. Everyone, that is, except a majority of Israelis. Inconveniently, they solid their vote right down the middle. Well, not quite. They gave enough new support to nationalist and religions parties to give Labor's archival, the conservative Likud bloc, a good shot at forming the next coalition government. Israel's slight tilt to the nationalist and religious right will cause many hands to be wring in the West. Com-mentators will note, and self-declared "friends of Israel" will lamont, that the Jewish state, founded on enlightened secular socialist ideals, is now displaying a nationalist, religious atavism.

Even if this is true, even if a shift of one or two percent in the electorate really does signify a redirec-tion of Israel's destiny, it should come as no surprise. Arabs have long complained that Israel was a for-eign body implanted in the heart of their world. Well, after 40 years in the neighborhood, Israel is becoming more and more like its neighbors. Fanatical Iran, praetorian Iraq, sectarian Leba-non, eveo the Palestinians in Israeli-held territories are being swept by powerful nationalist and fundamentalist currents. Jews are not immune. In this regional climate, it is hard to expect Israel to turn the other check and embrace a more enlightened internationalism, in which the bloody conflict is to be settled among reasonable men over a clean table in Geneva. Israelis are skeptical of this Labor Party vision, and showed it at the polls Tuesday.

The big popular-vote winner, however, was not the nationalist right. The real gamers were the far left, mostly Arab and Communist parties (they gained two seats) and the religions parties of oo firm political conviction at all. The religious par-tread carefully. The Reagan honeymoon is over, largel will not see the likes of Ronald Reagan and George Shultz again. Under a Bush administration and under the cloud of a continuing Palestinian and under the count of a commung ratesuman uprising, there will be from the beginning Ameri-can pressure on the new Israeli government. The major task of that government will be to retain good relations with the new U.S. administration.

Mr. Shamir can start with three steps: show extreme restraint in any West Bank settlement policy; find prominent foreign policy and/or defense positions for Israel's two best diplomats, Moshe Arens and Benjamin Netanyahu; and find as small an international role as possible for Ariel Sharon. How well Mr. Sharin navigates these tasks will give the first sign of how good a caretaker he will be.

The Least 4 Of These Elections

By William Pfaff

PARIS - Of the four important I votes just cast or about to be cast, the American election is the least interesting and probably the least im-portant. The others, in Israel, Algeria and France, have been about serious things. The American vote is not about much of anything except two men's ambitions, though there is much that it might have been about.

An American political scholar spending the year studying in the Netherlands while also lecturing in West Germany remarked to the recently that he had realized with bemasement that "there really are no serious problems over here." and France are nearly all good prob-lems — constructive challenges with solutions, if hard solutions, from which one reasonably expects better things. The fundamentals in these countries are sound. Their econo-mies, finances, industrial infrastructures, educational systems, work force — their human relations — all are in essentially healthy shape. None of this is true of the United to States, which is why the presidential campaign has proved so deeply disap-pointing. Yet the voters themselves eliminated the candidates who tried to offer something better. The public made it clear that real issues could oot be raised by any candidate wanting to win. Americans seem determined to ignore the country's problems.

Israel has worse problems than the United States, but has carried out a hammering debate on every one of them. It seems now that a government led by the conservative Likud bloc will emerge from Tuesday's vote, and Likud does have a policy - even if it is not one the international community, or Washington, much likes. The Israeli election probably will accelerate emigration and Israel's slow drift away from its secular Zionist and European origins, toward becoming a predominantly oriental society. Possi-bly in the long term — the very long term - there is a solution in that to the nation's essential problem of coex-istence with the Palestinians. It is hard to see a short-term solution; but at least Israel now will have a government rather than a stalemate.

The Algerian referendum on reforms in the political system, which was held Thursday, was a significant move toward liberalization of a one-party state where the ruling party, which coodneted the inde-pendence struggle against France, has found peace a great deal harder to manage than war. The crucial factor in what has happened is that pressure from the public itself produced change - the mass demonstrations carly last month, above all by the young. They, and ublic profests agains

Israel: Yet a Harder Line If Israel's election constituted a referenbloc of Yitzhak Shamir lose a few seats. The dum on an international peace conference and how to manage the Palestinian uprising in the West Bank and Gaza, the decision tilts against compromise and for getting tougher. If Yasser Arafat's recent interview in Time magazine signals where the Palestine Liberation Organization is heading, the message is:

no willingness to break ground for peace. If one also considers the recent Palestinian terrorist acts in Israel, the trend seems ominously obvious: more violence on both sides.

testers on the brink of success. The diplo-mats did not meet the deadline they had set for themselves of Nov. 1, the 10th anniversary of the United Nations's call to South Africa to set Namibia free. For one reason, the Angolan government and Cuba, whose

50,000 troops defend it, evidently wanted in see if they could get the casy terms promised by Michael Dukakis - an American cutoff of the Angolan rebels and relief from direct pressure for Cuban withdrawal.

With a win by George Bush, however, all parties would have to live with something in the neighborhood of the Reagan terms,

A solution has at least three interlocking parts. The United States has been driving negotiations to ensure independence under

UN auspices to Namibia and to remove the Cuban forces; these negotiations involve war-weary Angola, Namibia and South Africa, a Soviet Union tired of its regional burden and, it seems, a Cuba prepared for its own reasons to go home. In a useful and necessary division of diplomatic labor, Nigeria, Zaire, Morocco and other African states are working to defuse the basic conflict between the Angolan government, sup-

as they appear prepared to do.

Equally troubling are demands by pivotal religious parties to enforce Orthodox rules of who is a lew and what can be done on the Sabbath. By agreeing to these in order to form a coalition government, Likud leaders would further undermine Israeli unity and ignite uncase among Jews elsewhere.

In any case, it will take days or weeks for Israelis to form a new government, And it will take an additional six months or more for the next U.S. administration to develop a new strategy to refurbish hopes for a settlement and contain the looming explosions. But for the moment, the only counsel is restraint. Once again, it seems, the hardliners and bitter-enders have triumphed in the Holy Land. The situation seems primed for a bloody and extended test of wills. The Israeli vote saw both the Labor

alignment of Shimon Peres and the Likud

While the evidence is mixed, political instinct suggests that recent lethal Palestinian attacks against Israelis affected the election results. The loss of lives must have tipped critical scales against making any compromises with the Palestinians.

(Give or Take) To Vote Bush By George F. Will

5,003 Reasons

WASHINGTON - The presi-dential campaign, having promised instruction and barely delivered diversion, now says to a stop and f herewith complete the task be-gun in my last column (IHT, Nov. 3). Then I made the case for electing Michael Dukakis. Today f undertake the comparably Herculean task of arguing George Bush's case. Is Mr. Bush better than he seems?

No. This low, dishonest campaign, which squandered the precious commodity of the nation's attention, was the carefully prepared and freely cho-sen culmination of his public life to date. He seems to have passed through the turnalis of the 20th century unmarked by any of its great passions or arguments or aspirations, Paradoxically, that may be the key to putting the best face on his performance.

Perhaps he has campaigned basely because he has, in place of substantive political motives, a single ideal. He is moved entirely by an abstract duty to "serve," not by any idea be wants to be in the service of. In the absence of ideas, mere tactics are everything. He is at once vaguely admirable and ominously empty. What matters is who will fill him up. That brings us to 5,000 reasons for pointments, from cabinet officers on down, that a president makes or are made in his name. An important ques-tion, the crucial question when both candidates are so inadequate, is:

judges sitting in The Hague have been around for decades to resolve disputes, but jostling sovereign states have shied from submitting their legal differences to the court's binding arbitration.

Now a Soviet official suggests that Moscow is ready to use the court to settle arguments arising from some of its treaties. and to arbitrate cases involving international finance, trade and terrorism. If Soviet hints are matched by deeds, there could yet be a World Court worthy of the oame.

The United States has long accepted the court's compulsory jurisdiction on treaty disputes, while reserving the right to reject its jurisdiction on contentious issues like the use of force. Thus the Reagan administration refused to appear in The Hague to answer Nicaragua's suit against the United States for aiding contra rebels. The court ruled in Nicaragna's favor. The State Department's fegal adviser, to appear at The Hague, though a learned Soviet jurist now serves on the court. Now Moscow for the first time is ponder ing a list of treaties and agreements on which it may accept the court's compulsory jurisdiction. And it is seeking agreement among members of the UN Security Council for submitting to the court's arbitration disputes in specified areas of international law, such as trade and terrorism.

If Moscow follows through, it will have made the best possible response to Mr. Sofaer's valid challenge. Soviet and American lawyers can take the next step by finding a dispute to submit swiftly to the court for binding judgment. They might avail themselves of a new and simpler procedure providing for a five-judge panel. Once the Hague machinery becomes routinely used, part of the pious but forlorn vision of world law will become real.

Israelis who believe that their government should he secular and tolerant in domestic affairs and moderate and pragmatic in trying to find an accommodation with the Palestinians are in for some rough times ahead. This week's election seems likely to produce a new governing coalition that is determined to follow a hard line on the occupied territories and to give the religiously orthodox even greater authority over domestic life. Is this what most Israelis really want? Probably not, but it's what they have given themselves, thanks to a peculiar electoral system that seems almost to have been designed to award disproportionate influence to minority parties and narrow interests.

PARIS - I have long had a dream ... For 56 years f have participated in American presidential elections, and for all those years I have sought a candidate who embod-ied the ideals of the American Revolution. I dreamed of a just society, with opportunity regardless of race, creed or class; I dreamed of a nation that would lead the world to peace ... I first went to the polls in 1932, not old enough to vote. My fresh social sciences professor had assigned us to read works by Herbert Hoover, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Norman Thomas, all of whom were ronning for president, and to enroll as poll watchers for the candidate of our choice. Much to my family's consternation I chose Norman Thomas, and I shall ovver forget the surprised look of the precinct officials when a f5year-old showed up with official Socialist Party credentials early on that November morning. Of course, my candidate did not win. It was Roosevelt whom the nation chose, and he led us out of Depression and through the worst war in the history of man. He was an inspiring leader.

Now, 14 elections later, I continue face the electorate again.

You Thought '88 Was Bad?

Y OU think the presidential campaign's been nasty so far? Well, whit 'til you hear this: One of the guys in the '88 presidential race used to beat his wife. But what can you expect from a man who had an illegitimate soo, and who sat out his generation's war because he had money?

Stavening to know who it is? Well, it's Grover Cleveland (sorry), who, according to one account, lost the presidency in 1883 party because he could not sourch the rumor that he spent his evenings abusing Mrs. Cleveland Mr. Cleveland did have an illegitimate son, and he paid source to take his place in the Civil War. The wife-beating was a baseless rumor. American elections have often been exercises in slander, and the great issues of the day have often been beside the point. Andrew Jackson's mother was called a prostinute and his wife "a profligate woman." Abraham Lincoln was illegitimate, said the rumors. He was part black and his wife was a traitor. All this was in the press. Lincoln's famous opponent, Stephen Douglas, was harmed by a report that he had once kissed the pope's loot.

Want more? Theodore Roosevelt was a drug fiend. Franklin Roosevelt was a secret Jew whose real name was Rosenfeldt. Herbert Hoover was a German sympathizer in World War L The crick in James Buchanan's neck was caused by a youthful suicide attempt. Martin Van Buren dressed in women's corsets. And Barry Goldwater was allied with Bavarian fastists.

Where was the press in all this? Discreely avoiding the mud until it had proof? That's a good one. The press used to make up many of these lies. - Charles Freund, an editor of The Washington Post's Outlook section.

France is holding Sunday on the govermment's new plan for resolving the question of New Caledonia's future. Prime Minister Michel Rocard painstakingly negotiated this agreement with the principal Melanesian independence group and the main party representing the white community in that Pacific territory.

The plan effectively partitions New Caledonia between the communities and postpones the issue of actual independence for 10 years. The referendum in France was called to cassure the Melancsians that the French public backs the plan. There has never been much doubt that it would be approved, but a low turnout was feared. The ex-Gaullist party of former Prime Minister Jacques Chirac disgraced itself by calling for chirac insplaced insch of calling its abstention, a mean-spirited act that would have evoked the contempt of General de Gaulle himself. (It is no f longer accurate, I think, to use the term "Gaullist" in connection with Mr. Chirac's movement.)

Where have the great men gone? Or in public life, the honorable men? Mr. Rocard did well for his country with this reconciliation of the Ne Caledonians - who seemed, six months ago, close to civil war. The leading New Caledonian politi-cal figures, Jean-Marie Tjibaou of the independence movement and his principal opponent, Jacques La-fleur, discarded sectarian commitment and cooducted themselves with admirable regard for the public interest. The Race to Pick the Winner

Polls will close first in parts of Kentucky and Indians, at 2300 GMT (6 P.M. Eastern Standard Time) Tuesday, and a presidential election winner could theoretically emerge within a couple of hours while poll-ing is still taking place in the West. All four major broadcasting net-works, ABC, CBS, NBC and CNN, say they will tell viewers as soon as

Dukakis Gains in 2 States

WASHINGTON --- Governor Michael S. Dukakis gained slightly on Vice President George Bush in California, surged ahead in Washington state and maintained his advantage in West Virginia, while the Republican presidential nominee held slim leads in Michigan and Pennsylvania, according to polls released Friday. In the last California Poll before the presidential election, Mr.

Bush held a 6-point lead among the state's voters. The survey, conducted Monday through Wednesday, showed Mr. Bush leading Mr. Dukakis, 49 percent to 43 percent, with 8 percent undecided. An ABC-TV poll conducted in Pennsylvania on Wednesday and Thursday showed Mr. Bush leading 49 percent to 46 percent.

In a poll of 400 Washington voters taken last weekend by KING-TV, Mr. Dukakis snrged into the lead, 51 percent to 41 percent. Mr. Bush led Mr. Dukakis in Michigan, 48 percent to 44 percent, a poll published in The Detroit News said Friday.

But the networks said they would not project election results in any individual state until the polls had closed in that state.

By questioning people coming out of voting centers, the networks are usually in a position to make a reliable state forecast even before the polls close.

Jimmy Carter conceded the race in 1980 while voting was still taking place in western states, which are three hours behind the East Coast. In 1984, CBS declared President

Ronald Reagan the winner at 0101 GMT, while there were still another four hours to vote on the West Coast; ABC followed 12 minutes later and NBC announced the result at 0131. Democrats said this discouraged voters and cost them congressional seats. After the 1980 election, Congress discussed and then dropped a proposal for a uniform closing time. The networks said they would welcome such a move.

How to Tune In for Results

Live, English-language coverage of the voting results will be available by radio in most parts of the world Tuesday night and Wednesday, with television broadcasts also available to cable and satellite subscribers in many areas.

On Radio

• The Voice of America plans live coverage of the election via its worldwide oetwork of media wave and short-wave transmitters. In addition, the coverage will be transmitted in a oumber of European cities served by VOA-Europe FM broadcasts and relayed by hundreds of foreign radio and TV outlets, a spokesman said in Washington. The special broadcast will start at midnight GMT Tuesday and continue until all major states have reported final results of the presidential balloting. VOA also plans live broadcasts in Brazilian, Russian and Spanish, along with special news bulletins in 39 other languages.

VOA in English can be heard, atmospheric conditions permitting, on the following kilohertz frequencies: Europe, 7200, 6040, 1197 and 792; Mid-die East, 9740, 7200, 6040 and 792; Far East, 17820, 17735, 15290, 15185, 11760, 9770 and 7120; South Asia, 17735, 15250, 15215, 11710, 9740 and 7115; Africa, 11835, 9525, 7280, 6035 and 621; Latia America, 15205, 11695, 11740, 11580, 9815, 9775, 9455, 6130, 5995, 1580 and 930.

 The BBC World Service will be broadcasting from studios in Washington throughout the night starting at 2300 GMT Thesday.

• The Armed Forces Network in Frankfurt and the Southern European Broadcasting oetwork in Vicenza, ftaly, will be carrying live coverage throughout the night until a winner is declared in the presidential race.

On Television

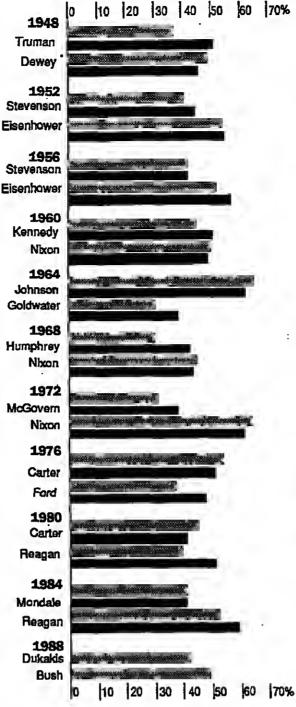

· Cable News Network, which reaches satellite and cable subscribers in several European countries and hotel clients in Asia, will have 12 hours of live coverage starting at midnight GMT. The coverage will include regular reports from the White House and the Bush, Dukakis, Quayle and Bentsen campaign headquarters. • C-Span, the Cable Satellite Public Affairs

Network, will broadcast from midnight to 0800 GMT Wednesday on the Sky Channel in Western Europe

· Tele Montecarlo, which covers three quarters of Italian territory, will have English-language broadcasting through the night, with live segments st key moments. • In Tokyo, television coverage is available in English chiefly through Japan Cable Television, which will begin carrying Cable News Network coverage of the elections

Nonetheless, their disagreements on such highly charged topics, per-haps more than differences on the central issues of foreign and economic policy, have established the character of the candidates in the mind of the public. They will-doubtless be the basis on which many voters will choose next week. Here is a rundown of the Bush and Dukakis positions on econom-ic and foreign policy, followed by their stances on the "gut" campaign issues and other areas of domestic policy:

What Dukakis Needs In Electoral College

WASHINGTON -Political strategists say that Michael S. Dukakis must win the popular vote in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and California if he is to have any hope of becoming president.

This is because of the peculiarities of the American electoral system in particular the electoral college. Millions of Americans will vote Tuesday, but their next president will be formally selected by 538 obscure individuals more than a month later.

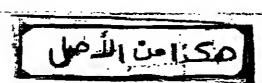

The popular vote for president is subject to final approval by the Electoral College, which was established by the founding fathers. The voters will actually elect slates of college members pledged to oue of the candidates.

The college electors, in turn, cast their presidential ballots in their state capitals on Dec. 19 and the votes are tallied in the presence of the House and Senate in the first week of January.

Electoral votes are allotted to the states in rough proportion to population. Each state has the same number of electors as members of Congress. As a rule, the winner of the popular vote in a state wins all of that state's electors whether the popular vote margin is one or 1.000.

Worst-Case Scenario

Polls

Campaign analysts from both parties expect that the worst-case scenario for the Democratic Party will be the loss of a handful of seats and that the more likely outcome is that they will keep the same num-

"The odds are, without a strong presidential pull, the Republicans lose a net of a couple of seats," said William Schneider, a political analyst. "If Bush does extremely well. as appears possible, Republicans could avent that problem and maybe gain a few seats."

"I don't think there will be much change in the House," said Joseph R. Gaylord, executive director of the National Republican Congressional Committee. "My sense is we have the opportunity to pick up some, but it's kind of hard, when you look at the statistics on incumbents, to be that crazy about what your opportunities are."

With incumbents of both parties enjoying enormous, and increasing, advantages, the major battleground is the 27 open seats created by House members deciding to retire or try for higher office.

Of the 27 open seats, 15 have been held by Republicans. And Democratic candidates are mounting unusually strong races for some of these 15 seats, including a few that have been Republican fiefdoms for decades.

"When I look at the 12 open seats, only four or five have a chance of turning over," said Mr. Gaylord of Democratic seats.

A Full Slate of Referendums

WASHINGTON - Voters in dozens of states will be making choices on Tuesday that could have a direct effect on their finances and way of life. As well as casting ballots for local, state and federal officials, some voters will be asked to approve or reject referendums --- known as initiatives or propositions - on various issues. Among the most prominent are:

AUTO INSURANCE

Californians will choose among five measures aimed at reducing car insurance premiums and reforming the rate-setting process. ABORTION

Pro-, and anti-abortion groups have focused their fight on Michigan, where voters could ban tax-financed abortions for the poor. In Arkansas, a proposed amendment would also rule out taxanced abortions and protect life from conception to birth. Coloradans will decide whether to repeal a constitutional amendment similar in the one in Arkansas.

GUN CONTROL Maryland voters will decide whether to keep a law passed this spring that was designed in ban the cheap handguns known as Saturday Night Specials

"OFFICIAL ENGLISH"

In 1986 Californians approved a measure that made English the state's official language. This year voters in Florida, Colorado and Arizona, which bave all had a buge influx of Spanisbspeaking immigrants, are being asked to decide whether to follow California.

SMOKING

Oregon is considering the toughest statewide smoking ban in the nation, one that puts most public places off limits to smokers. California will decide whether to raise the state's cigarette tax. from 10 cents to 35 cents a pack GAMBLING

Idaho, Kentucky and Minnesota will consider legalizing state lotteries. South Dakotans will decide whether to permit a return of legal gambling in Deadwood, the town where Wild Bill Hickok was shot and killed 112 years ago while be was playing poker. He held a pair of aces and a pair of eights, which have come in he known as "the dead man's band." AIDS

California has a controversial referendum on its ballot, concerning confidentiality for people with AIDS.

Paul Gann, who a decade ago belped pass the state's Proposition 13 in cui property taxes, is now crusading for Proposition 102, which imposes mea-sures that are opposed by the medical establish-ment. It would require doctors in report to state health officials the names and addresses of those with the disease or those they reasonably believe might be infected

HOMOSEXUAL RIGHTS

Oregon will decide whether to revoke Governor Neil Goldschmidt's order banning discrimination against state employees on the basis of sexual orientation. Voters in Fort Collins, Colorado, will consider a proposal prohibiting discrimination in jobs, bousing or public accommodations.

War and Art: Japan's Feudal Glory

ASHINGTON - "Japan: W The Shaping of Daimyo Cul-ure, 1185-1868" at the National Gallery of Art is an incredibly ambitious undertaking, an attempt to sum up seven centuries of a na-tion's history in a mere 400 objects OT SO.

It is a splendid exhibition because the objects are splendid. Even in an age of huge internationons of art, this one stands out for the variety and quality of the materials in it. This is cultural diplomacy at a high level: Because of the importance attached to the relationship between their country and ours, the holders of the great public and private collections throughout Japan were persuaded to relinquish many of their most valued icons for the show, which continues until Jan. 23 and which will be seen only in Washington.

The show is a dream, and a clichè, come true. Hundreds, probably thousands, of books have been written to explicate and analyze the differences between the histories. cultures and traditions of American and Japanese societies, but never have the differences been so forcefully, so materially, demonstrated as here. A Westerner taking the first step into these East Building galleries immediately leaves familiar ground behind, and knows Westerners spending even short spells in contemporary Japan are quick to suspect that the superabundant manifestations of modern life mask social operations dramatically different from their own. But in these exhibition rooms there are no such distractions - no bright lights, no vending machines, no bullet trains, no freeways - to hide the extraordinary fact that scarcely more than a century ago Japan was an isolated anomaly, a feudal leftover in an age of industrialization.

The exhibition is a long, intense armies and fought each other mer-backward look. Omitted from it is cilessly for a large part of the time much that we would be familiar covered by this exhibition.

with, especially the great 18th- and 19th-century woodblock prints known as ukiyo-e, pictures of the "floating world." When first seen in mid-19th-century France these exercised an important influence on Western painting and they remain popular. But they were the products of almost another world, of the dynamic, urban, proto-capitalist society that thrived alongside - underneath, in theory - the dominant feudalism and its rigid, proscriptive, militaristic ethos. When one leaves this exhibition it isn't teeming cities one has in mind but castles, horses, swords and elegant courtly art

Four decades ago the cultural anthropologist Roth Beoedict opened her now dated but still valuable study. "The Chrysanthemmm and the Sword," with the ob-servation that "the Japanese have been described in the most fantastic series of 'but-also's' ever used for any nation in the world." When a serious observer, for instance, 'says people of some nation are incomparably rigid in their behavior, be does not add, 'But also they adapt themselves readily to ex-treme innovations." For Japan, the scenningly contradictory qualifier is a necessity. The "butthat is the primary subject of this exhibition is the tense, productive coexistence in feudal Japan of the upon the other.

There is no mistaking, however, which of the two was dominant. The term daimyo, says the Princetoo scholar Martin Collcutt in his catalogue essay, combines the Japanese characters for "dai ('great') and myo ('name'; from myoden, 'name fields,' referring to privately owned land)." SOLVE As it happens, the unbulent be-ginnings of the daimyo age coincid-ed with the greatest period of Japanese sculpture, a fact rewardingly reflected in this show. Among the best of the best are portrait sculptures of famous Buddhist monks. Their placement close to similar portraits of the great daimyo subtly makes the point that the particularities of Baddhist evolution went hand in hand with military power.

It is hardly surprising to find deities who reflect the warlike spirit, Kamakura-era (1185-1333) guardians and generals in the Buddhist pantheon superbly carved in wood, their rippling muscles and dramatic gestures the epitome of the martial spirit. And to come upon stupendous battle scenes, million such as the pair of screens depicting the battle of Schigahara in engaging detail, with more than 2,000 figures, most marching, fighting, fleeing or dying but at least two pansing for tea. This battle, in 1600, decided which of the clans would hold power after Hideyoshi's death, and basically it settled the course of Japanese history for two and a half centuries.

What about the other Japan, the bouoteoos moootaio domicile where nature in all of its guises was celebrated in word, image and deed, where monastic religion took hold, where sophisticated courtly pastimes held sway? This too is in the show, the other side of the military coin. Most dramatically, it is present in the mural-size photographs of castles and incomparable gardens taken by National Geographic Society photographer Mi-chael Yamashita, and the beautifully carpentered replica of a tea ceremony house. Most persuasively, though, it is present in the

scribed as the busiest executive within Christie's. For the firm, it was a necessity, however. Curiel says that his most urgent task is to build an integrated structure where, for the time being, Christie's has 14 loosely connected offices. While four also stage sales - Amsterdam, Geneva, Monaco, Rome - ten essentially collect goods for sale. Not unnaturally, this tends to be done on the basis of each region-al head's personal inclinations and competence, and of the relationships they have developed with the selling centers. Maria Reinshagen of Zurich, for example, is doing a superb job in contemporary art and has greatly helped New York sales.

"This is excellent. But we still need a common policy," Curiel wryly Even more important, in the immillion, Christie's largest ever in mediate, is the need to improve the America, even though he missed method of doing business. Being managing director of ment that was handed in on May Christie's Europe on top of all that 14,1987. Four points were considcel: the sale - dates, reserves, al promotion; the positive reasons for choosing Christie's; and administrative matters. For a month, documents went back and forth between the executors and the two auction houses they had contacted. No detail seemed too trivial. Regarding traveling exhibitions, for example, Curiel recalls that Chris-tie's had included Los Angeles. Would they be taking along all the jewels? Or only the main ones? the executors queried - never letting out which solution had their preference. "Uotil I got a telephone call confirming their acceptance, I did not have a clue as to who would get the deal," he says.

Curiel feels that he won the battle on international promotion. "We told them in great detail what we were going to do to make sure that the whole world had heard about Caroline Ryan Foulke."

Some in the trade believe in fact that the trump card in favor of Christie's was the idea that the executors got of what François Curiel stood for in the world of jewels. A mixture of both may be closer to the truth. "It was a close race anyway," Curiel wistfully concludes. The prize on Dec. 2, 1987, was a $3.89 million sale, 12 percent over the high estimate and not one item bought in.

It is by bringing such methods to Europe that Curiel hopes to set Christie's on a new course for expansion on the Continent. "The niggest market for us will obviously be France. If we are allowed to operate according to Commoo Market rules, we should be able to set up a full-fledged self-contained auction system in which we shall be getting art for sale from French vendors and sell it to French buyers. It will be quite unlike Geneva where I bring in clients from elsewhere twice or three times a year. Paris has a fantastic potential."

Will this mean a raging battle with the established auctioneers? There is oo reason why this should be so," be says. "If we team up with some of the more dynamic auctioncers and experts and use our timeproven methods, it might take off like a rocket."

The realistic-minded Curjel does, not believe this may come topass at zero hour Greenwich Meai Time on Jan. 1, 1993. He gives it three or four years, at least, perhaps is long as a decade. "It won't even be my own doing. That's mevitable, you know." It is hard to tell with Curiel whether he says it with a gint of irony or just cool restraint. His foes will have their work cut out for them. The combination of the fast, French-style intelligence and the New York business approach, all of it lightly polished by the smoother British manner that has rubbel off on Curiel after 19 years with Christie's, is a formidable one. Thebest position to be in, however, will be the spectator's. What a swell same it's going to be!

A TIME OF RECONCILIATION

Oerture in Region Pents to New Era Fr Moroccans

Kir Hassan's patient policy of stick-ingo his guns in the Western Sahara by olding off Algerian-backed guer-rills for over 12 years seems to be pang off. A peaceful settlement is no in sight, according to diplomats intabat.

Thingdom's sudden reconciliation last May with the societ regime in neighboring Algeria "enables it to bre out of diplomatic isolation in the Third World, whe most nonaligned states back the guerrillas," a vean Western diplomat said.

the past, Morocco ritually broke off relations with stars that recognized the self-styled Saharan Arab Diocratic Republic (SADR) proclaimed by Polisario girillas, who have been fighting for independence of thformer Spanish colony since 1976.

his policy is changing. Diplomatic ties were re-sed this year with Yugoslavia, one of 71 states to rognize the SADR, and bilateral relations are being civated with several of the Polisario's African fnds, although Morocco walked out of the Organizain of African Unity (OAU) when it admitted the DR as a member in 1984.

*It seems Morocco is convinced the Sahara conflict If be settled in its favor soon, thanks to the United itions, and it does not matter anymore who believes the existence of a Saharan republic," a sympathetic frican diplomat said.

At the end of August, Morocco and Polisario accept-I with unspecified reservations the peace plan in hich UN Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuéllar roposed a cease-fire followed by a self-determination eferendum to allow nomads in the thinly populated erritory to choose between independence or integraion with Morocco."

King Hassan said he is convinced the vote will indicate Morocco's "historic" claims to the bleak lesert territory, which became valuable after Spain liscovered huge deposits of phosphate, the raw material of fertilizers and detergents. The prospect of a peaceful settlement also helps to strengthen Morocco's traditional ties with the United States, France and Spain, who have supplied arms to fight the war, and with moderate Arab states like Saudi

Now the dream seems set to become a reality. The spectacular rapprochements of the past 12 months between Libya and its neighbors Algeria and Tunisia culminated this May in a reconciliation between Algeria and Morocco. Their dipute over the Western Sahara issue was one of the main stumbling blocks to

The concept conceived in the first After a quarter of a century of uncertainty, the idea of a Maghreb Union — or North African common market on the European pattern is back on the agenda.

> King Hassan has called "the framework of the union's structures." Because of their widely diverse political systems — the Moroccan monarchy, the Algerian socialist system, Mauritania's military regime, the Tunisian republic and Libyan "people's power"—the Ma-ghreb union is seen as more of an economic than a political grouping. Economists see the prospect of an integrated North African market emerging, with trade barriers gradu-

North Africa's main market and supplier, the European Community, has strongly influenced Maghreb decision-makers by fixing 1992 as the date for European integration.

This year American, West German and Portuguese promoters offered to build three seaside leisure complexes with a total capacity of about 24,000 beds. At present there are about 120,000 beds available in officially classified tourist hotels.

The biggest project is an "African Acapulco" for the seaside resort of Agadir, on the same latitude as Miami, which boasts 300 days of sunshine a year. Plans for the project, which would cost an estimated $447 million, were submitted to the government by the American company Burch and Brookshire Hotels. They already operate over 40 hotels in the United States.

The project would consist of three high-class hotels totaling 1,580 rooms, 2,000 apartments, a marine with 200 moorings, 1,2000 seat convention hall, an 18-hole golf course, a casino, an open-air amphitheater and a water sports center built in the sea.

In the meantime a similar but more modest project is to be built near Agadir by a consortium led by the West German group Necker-mann Union Reisen (NUR), a subsidiary of Karstadt. Costing only $20 million, this "vacation village" of 1,000 beds on Taghasout Bay will open in 1990 and be built in association with the national airline Royal Air Maroc, local banks and insurance companies.

With its sweeping bay overlooked by the Atlas mountains and semidesert hinterland, Agadir has become increasingly popular since King Hassan built a large new palace outside the city. A 45-bole golf course designed by U.S. architect

The road to Morocco, already taken by over 1.5 million foreign tourists annually, could be carrying 10 times as many within the next 20 years if government plans succeed.

Robert Trent Jones is being built nearby, as the king is a keen golfer. The integrated vacation village concept caters mainly to package tours. NUR President Rudolph Pagnia said his group planned to bring in 50,000 German tourists a year for vacations that would cost about $70 a day per head, inclusive.

Another complex is planned by the Lisbon-based International Consortium for Management and Tourism Investment (Cogitour), which signed a deal with the government to invest $140 million at Saidia on the Mediterranean coast near the Algerian border.

With three hotels totaling 600 rooms, a vacation village of 500 units, a 36-hole golf course and other sports amenities, it will be the first major complex built in 20 years on the largely undeveloped Mediterranean coast with its spectacular Rif mountain scenery. The unspoiled northern coast has another vacation village at Al-Hoceima, one of four built in Morocco by the French Club Méditerranée, whose success with the formula has stimulated others to launch similar projects. On the western end of the same coast at Restinga, where there is another "Club Med," Morocco's biggest private enterprise, the Omnium Nord-Africain (ONA), is building a new resort within easy reach of Tangier, a cosmopolitan city popular with tourists.

Run by King Hassan's son-in-law Fouad Filali, a Harvard Business School graduate, ONA is becoming a multinational corporation and its participation in the tourist industry part of its expansion plans.

About two hours by plane from Europe, Morocco and its Californian-style climate, old walled cities, exotic culture and relatively uncrowded resorts used to attract an upmarket clientele. But this is changing. The tourism minister recently said 20 million tourists a year was a "reasonable objective" that could be achieved in 20 years.

Privatization: Targeting The Appropriate Sectors

To remedy the economic ills that plagued the country in the early 1980s. Morocco's center-right government has embarked on a "bold privatization policy." The road to recovery has begun.

When the government was formed in 1985, Prime Minister Mohamed Karim Lamrani told Parliament that certain economic sectors taken over by the state after independence from France in 1956 would be gradually handed over to private enterprise

He said the government envis-aged "a bold policy of denational-ization to return to private enterprise everything that naturally belongs to it." This is a policy strongly favored by the Internation-al Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Three years later, Lamrani's successor, Azeddine Laraki, is heading the same government and still wrestling with the problem of how to improve the efficiency of some 400 state-controlled enterprises. According to Finance Minister Mohamed Berrada, the "reform and rationalization" of the firms is a "fundamental priority" in the five-year economic development plan that began this year.

"Civil servants are the world's worst farmers"

improve the efficiency of some 400

To help finance the reforms, the World Bank loaned Morocco $240 million in May 1987, and to implement them, Parliament was due to discuss new legislation this fall.

While details of the reforms have not yet been published, it is antici-pated that so-called "strategic sectors" will not be touched. Among these is the biggest industrial enterprise in the country, the Office Cherifien des Phosphates (OCP), which has a monopoly on phosphate mining and processing. Run by former Prime Minister Lamrani, it has a reputation for being an efficient foreign exchange-earner. Others unlikely to be privatized are the state-owned railroad company, the national airline, the petroeum industry and electric power production and distribution. But heir operations will probably be streamlined to make them more efficient and cost-conscious. Agriculture will be one of the first sectors affected by privatization, particularly the 1.5 million acres of French colonial property run as state farms since it was nationalized in 1973.

As former Minister of Agriculture Ahmed Reda Guedira once remarked: "Civil servants are the world's worst farmers." Privatization of this land, which is some of the best in the country, will in theory increase productivity and help halt the rural exodus.

The government has apparently decided that civil servants are no good at marketing farm products either. It has already started break-ing up the Office de Commercialisa-tion et d'Exportation (OCE), the state agency that held a monopoly or agriculture. Fish and handigraft on agricultural, fish and handicraft exports for over 20 years.

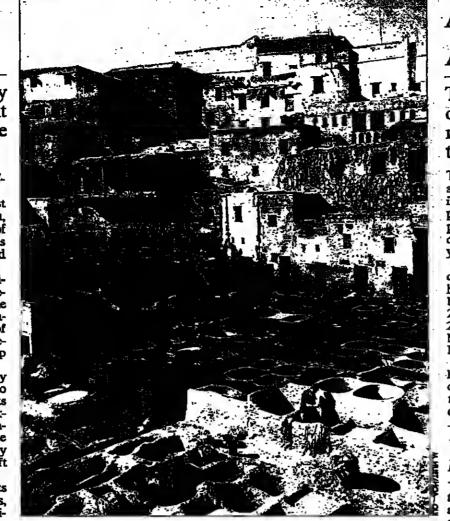

The OCE has been divested of its fruit, vegetable and fish exports, which have been taken over by pri-vate organizations like the Atlas Fruit Board (AFB). This year, for the first time, it handled 70 percent of citrus fruit exports on behalf of private growers and packers.

Partly thanks to the AFB's "flexibility" and a more aggressive marketing policy, Morocco exported 582,000 metric tons of citrus last season compared to 466,500 the season before, a performance that ana-lysts say demonstrates the merits of ivatization.

Other state agencies related to the agriculture sector, like the sugar and tea bureau, cereals and legumes bureau, and numerous mining companies controlled by the state, are also expected to be drastically overhauled and perhaps handed over to private enterprise as well.

This policy goes hand in hand with the official decision to rely heavily on private enterprise for industrial growth. In the last three years, the government has gradually withdrawn from industrial investment ed for 76 percent of new industrial investment projects, worth 4.7 bil-lion dirhams (about $560 million), officially approved by the govern-ment in 1987. Among them were foreign investments amounting to nearly $100 million.

Official approval means they en-joy the benefits of the 1983 Industri-al Investment Code, which offers incentives like five-year tax breaks, two-point interest rebates on loans and cheap plant sites.

The most active industrial sectors are textiles and leather (particularly ready-to-wear clothing and footwear) and the agro-industry. Investments in the former almost doubled in 1987, reaching 1.8 billion dir-hams ($220 million). As both sectors are mostly export-oriented, they can qualify for additional benefits under the Export Code.

Fears that agro-industry exports would be adversely affected by European Community restrictions

Agriculture: One New Dam A Year Till End of Centry

The worst locust invasion in over 30 years was riven off this year to save a bumper cereal harvest offver 7 million metric tons, on a par with the previor alltime record achieved in the 1986 season.

The two big harvests, with an average one in between, broke a blistering four-year drought cycle which put severe strains on the treasury to. pay for relief and import upwards of 2 million metric tons of grain a

To help protect farms from a capricious climate, King Hassan has decreed that one new dam must be built every year until the year 2000. The ultimate aim is to irrigate 2.4 million acres with water from Morocco's rivers, a rare asset in North Africa.

To exploit these resources, which help give Morocco the highest agri-cultural potential in North Africa, the country is adopting the dictum of the French colonial administra-

Unofficial estimates put the cost at over $1 billion, and officials say a barter deal is being arranged to ropay the Soviets in phosphates, fish products and agricultural commodities like citrus fruits. The World Bank is a major source of funds to finance develop-ment of the agricultural sector. This sector employs 42 percent of the work force, provides a livelihood for 57 percent of the population and accounted for 18.6 percent of GDP in 1987.

The bank, which a year ago loaned $225 million to improve farming efficiency, is also contributing $120 million to help finance a two-year program to raise productivity on nonirrigated land. The pro-gram should cost a total of $720 million, with the difference coming ... 12 from the African Development Bank, West Germany and Gestic funds.

The government's 1988-199co nomic development plan give gri-culture top priority and an to make Morocco self-sufficie in food. It already produces abc65 percent of its own sugar, practilly all the barley, hard wheat, its, meat, fish, poultry and eggs it nis, and exports over half a million as of citrus fruit a year plus substall quantities of fresh vegetables d anned foods like fish.

Most food exports go to the but since Spain and Portugal joid the Community and they ma much the same products, the roccans are deeply concerned their share of the EC market shrink.

To at least partly offset pote losses in Europe, they hope to det op agricultural exports to neighb ng Algeria when, in the wake of l May's political reconciliation, tra resumes.

Apart from the risk of me droughts before the ambitious dat building program is complete Morocco is still threatened by other locust invasion like the l major one in 1954, which devasta ed crops. It took citrus groves, fo example, over five years to recover from the disaster.

By deploying large numbers of troops, trucks and aircraft with spraying equipment, Morocco was able to fend off huge swarms before they got to crop-growing areas in the first months of this year. But as FAO expert Adel Cortas said: "The locusts were not really eradicated, they were just blown back to where they came from, and billions of the pests will be returning at the end of this year when winds and the weather change."

With this assurance, approved new agro-industry investments zoomed upward by 216 percent in the first five months of 1988, com-pared to the same period in 1987. The textile-leather sector also made a spectacular advance of another 84 percent in the same period, accordrassed by its determination to fight a war it cannot afford," an American analyst said. Military attachés estimate the conflict has been costing Morocco a million dollars a day. This helped to inflate its foreign debt, which has ballooned to $17 billion.

The economic ingredient of for-eign policy is also helped by politi-cal detente. This year has seen ma-jor accords signed with the European Community, France and Spain for financial assistance at a time when, according to King Hassan, the economy is on the upswing.

Morocco's application in early 1988 to join the EC was rejected for the simple reason that it is not physically part of Europe, although the king likes to say it is Europe's backyard, only 10 miles away across the Straits of Gilbraltar.

The EC increased its financial aid for the next five years by 62 percent to $388 million; Spain has promised $1.1 billion in the same period, the biggest package Madrid has ever given to a foreign country; and France's contributions rose to $132 million for the current year.

The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, with a new standby credit of 210 million special drawing rights, are also funding Morocco.

According to Finance Minister Mohamed Berrada and Central Bank Governor Ahmed Bennani, the influx of financial aid is a vote of confidence in Morocco's ability to straighten out its finances and also an "expression of faith" in Moroccan stability.

Although staunchly pro-Western under King Hassan, Morocco does not neglect relations with the Eastern bloc. It recently reached an un-derstanding with the Soviet Union to build the Mjara dam on the Ouergha River northeast of Rabat, billed as the biggest in Africa after Aswan in Egypt.

Morocco plans to pay the Soviets with fruit and phosphates to build Mjara. It will irrigate 240,000 acres and generate power to help cut dependence on energy imports, which are the biggest burden on the balance of payments.

But in the medium term, analysts say Morocco's foreign policy is likely to pay the biggest political divi-dends in North Africa, where Libyan-style radicalism will be diluted in a projected union with moderates like Tunisia and Mauritania and a more "pragmatic" Algeria.

King Hassan angered Arab radicals like Syria and Libya because he met with Shimon Peres when he was prime minister in 1986 to sound out Israeli intentions in the Middle East conflict. The meeting drew a blank but it pleased Washington, which was displeased with Morocco's 1984 "state union treaty" with Libya.

Moammar Gadhafi accused King Hassan of "treason" for talking to the "Zionist enemy," and the king abrogated the treaty. But, typically, he did not burn his bridges with Libya. He still maintains fairly cordial relations with Tripoli, although at an Arab summit held in Algeria in June, Gadhafi wore a white glove to avoid contagion when "shaking the hand that shook the hand of the enemy."

Diplomats say the incident illustrated Moroccan moderation in foreign policy. The king did not react by snubbing the Libyan leader, and took the gesture for what it was -- a rather childish act of no real consequence.

O.N.A is the leading industrial and financial Group in Morocco, listed on the Casablanca exchange. Our turnover in 1987 rose to 800 million dollars. Our staff numbers 12,500. We represent more than 1% of the gross industrial product and 2.2% of Morocco's foreign trade.

Our chairman and chief executive officer is Fouad Filali, a former investment banker in New York.

We are active in Agribusiness, Mining, Finance and Banking, Communications, Car industry, Transportation, Real estate, Tourism and various services industries.

Not only do we run and develop what is still considered to be the foundations of our Group, but we monitor the economic requirements and possibilities of Morocco as we make significant investments in high added value sectors.

Aware of the worldwide changes occuring everyday and having an impact on Morocco's future in the first place, we seek the ways and means of expanding our field of activity and developing new skills with foreign partners.

Deeply built on a strong domestic base and riding as the leading economic power in Morocco, we show, however, special interest and ambitions in international markets.

As we constantly have to innovate and initiate original forms of achievements in advanced sectors, we appear as leader in private initiative and forerunners with respect to the world's changes.

We are increasingly providing an infusion of capital and global connections to our group, forming a new breed of industries.

O.N.A is about to launch a private T.V. station in Morocco and Africa, purchase 20 cold-storage trawlers, achieve international ventures, particularly in distribution systems and tourism, while exploring the means of developing our establishments overseas.

of the kind who spend Christmas and New Year's in the lap of luxury at the famous Mamounia Hotel in Marrakech, recently refurbished at a reported cost of $43 million.

Yet tourism is a major source of foreign exchange, and for several years has outstripped the phosphate industry, the mainstay of the economy, which used to be the main export-earner. There has been an average annual growth of about 20 percent since 1962, reaching nearly $1 billion in 1987.

With foreign debts of over $17 billion, a serious unemployment problem, and the need to develop the domestic market for consumer products and services, tourism is a prime candidate for development and a profitable investment area.

The tourism ministry has announced plans to build $2 new hotels totaling nearly 20,000 beds at an estimated cost of over $300 million. Of these, 70 percent will be located either in the southern cities of Marrakech or Agadir, with a few in Casablanca, where the best hotel today is the Hyatt Regency.

Generally the Moroccan tourist industry is geared to European tastes, since over 1.3 million of last year's visitors came from Europe. The biggest contingent was from France (444,600, an increase of 13 percent over the year before). There was a remarkable 30 percent increase in the number of Spanish tourists, to 367,000 last year - probably people fleeing from the crowded resorts in their own country, but also the result of a more aggressive publicity cam-

Relatively small numbers of tourists came from the Americas, 116,000 in all, divided about equally between North and South America.

The "classic" Moroccan vacation usually consists either of sun, sea and sand at one of the beach resorts, or a grand tour of the "imperial - Fez, Marrakech, Meknes cities and Rabat - so called because each was once the capital of Morocco.

Trade Liberalization Spurs Flourishing Banking System

Morocco's banking system has flourished in the past decade as the country gradually moved out of a serious financial bind into a period of liberalization and readjustment aimed at correcting distortions and rationalizing its accounts.

The country's financial troubles be gan when the price earned by phosphate rock, sales of which had peaked at 20 million metric tons a year, fell by half to around $30 a metric ton. This came after heavy borrowing to finance capital-intensive five-year plans when it was thought that carnings from phosphate would make it easy to repay loans.

The problem worsened when the U.S. dollar and interest rates rose, the price of crude oil rocketed, and the war in the Western Sahara increased the burden on the treasury. It was further aggravated in the early 1980s by several drought years, making it necessary to import millions of tons of grain, and by a continued soft market for pbosphate. Thus Morocco accumulated a foreign debt of $17 billion and was forced to reschedule.

GNP forecast to grow 6% as turnaround continues

The turnaround came when the dollar, interest rates and crude oil prices fell, heavy and widespread rain produced bumper crops and, at the behest of the International Monetary Fund, determined measures were taken to straighten out the country's finances.

Ahmed Bennani, governor of Bank Al-Maghrib (the central bank), said recently: "We have ser-viced all our debts without interruption and without receiving any fresh money." He added that the country had also taken advantage of its problems to set up a modern fiscal system.

The readjustment program has helped to balance accounts by reducing government spending and increasing state revenue with more efficient tax collection, so that the overall treasury deficit was reduced from 12 percent of the gross nation-al product in 1982 to 6.1 percent in 1987.

Trade has been liberalized to the point that over 90 percent of imports no longer require prior authorization. In 1987, 66.3 percent of imports were covered by exports and the ratio is expected to top 70 percent this year. Since 1983 the balance of payments deficit has been almost wiped out, thanks to income from tourism, which rose over 200 percent, and remittances from an estimated 800,000 emigrant workers in Europe, which rose 160 percent. There was a modest current account surplus of over $12 million in 1987 the first since the 1970s - and the central bank predicts it will be substantially larger this year.

Finance Minister Mobamed Berrada told a cabinet meeting called to discuss next year's budget that GNP growth would be 6 percent --to 42.1 billion dirhams at constant 1969 prices - in 1988. It was only 1.5 percent last year, mainly because of mediocre barvests. GNP growth has to be offset by a 2.6 percent annual population growth. These first fruits of the government's dedication to its readjustment program are some cause for satisfaction, but the country's financial managers say there is still a long haul ahead and cautious financial policies will continue to prevail.

Morocco's 15 private commercial banks (with 800 branches throughout the country), the five specialized financial agencies (controlled by the state) and the central bank distributed 52.7 billion dirhams ($6.2 billion) in credit in 1987, representing over 37 percent of GDP.

In the same year the consolidated balance sheets of the private banks added up to about $10 billion, an increase of nearly 14 percent over 1986. The two largest banks, the Banque Populaire and the Banque Marocaine du Commerce Extérieur (BMCE), accounted for 38 percent of the total.

At the end of last December, deposits in private banks totaled 51.9

billion dirhams ($6.1 billion), an increase of one-tenth compared to the year before. It is remarkable that more than half the increase came from deposits by emigrant workers, for a total of 14.9 billion dirhams ($1.75 billion).

All funds repatriated by emigrant workers earn 8 percent interest, They play a leading role in helping to wipe out the balance of payments deficit and bave outstripped the phosphate industry as a source of foreign exchange.

During 1988, the government relaxed banking laws to encourage nonresident Moroccans to repatriate more income earned abroad. They can now open convertible dirham accounts for the first time, but only with a minimum of 500,000 dirbams.

Officials say the long-term aim is to remove restrictions on foreign currency exchange and eventually abolisb the exchange bureau as part of a general trend toward financial liberalization.

New Mosque in Casablanca Is Largest After Mecca

A monumental mosque billed as the largest in the world after those in Islam's holy places in Saudi Arabia is being built in Casablanca. To be finished next year, it will have a marble-sided nave that can hold 20,000 worshipers.

The "Great Hassan 11 Mosque," erected on the edge of the ocean near Casablanca's harbor, will bave a 158-meter-high minaret equipped with a laser beam aimed at Mecca.

The campaign to collect dona-tions, which the king said in a broadcast could be as little as one dirham (about 12 U.S. cents), has produced an "unparalleled surge of voluntary generosity," according to the interior and information minister, Driss Basri.

To set an example, the king offered a large portion of his personal and family fortune.

With this idea of popular funding, he wanted to give the citizens the right to participate in what the Prophet Mohammed described as a religious act.

The scale of this response demon-strates that the Moroccans are deeply attached to their religion and to their king, who is revered as Emir el-Muminin (Prince of the Faithful) and a descendant of Mohammed.

Donors receive a certificate inscribed with the Prophet's words: Whoever builds a mosque in which the name of Allah is pronounced will get a place in paradise."

When the mosque is completed, a dike now holding back the sea from the construction site will be removed to allow the Atlantic to surround the mosque's base. This feature reflects a verse in the Koran that says "The throne of God was over the water." Gulf countries are currently belping to finance the mosque.

imbalances will level off if prosperity is shared.

North African experts also believe the economies of the five are complementary in many ways. Libya and Algeria can supply the energy. Morocco fertilizers and food, and Tunisia the financial knowhow, leaving Mauritania as the poor relation.

The area's present population of about 55 million will grow to an estimated 88 million by the year 2000. But World Bank figures show wide disparities — per capita in-come figures vary from $7,170 a year in Libya through $2,550 in Algeria to $1,190 in Tunisia and $560 in Morocco. Economic cooperation has al-ready been launched on a modest scale with Tunisian-Algerian joint ventures in industry and the petroleum field, and plans are being laid for pipelines to take Algerian natural gas to Libya and across Morocco to Spain.

Another major project that has been gathering desert dust for well over a decade is a plan for the joint exploitation of large iron ore deposits at Gara Jebilet in southwestern Algeria, with the ore being shipped to the Atlantic coast across south Morocco. Diplomats say such projects make great economic sense, but could be delayed by unresolved political differences and fears that the wealthier states (Libya and Algeria) will vie with each other for legemony.

Hence, in a recent interview, King Hassan recognized that the construction of the Grand Arab Maghreb might be a long haul, but would ultimately benefit his children's children.

In 1943 where did Churchill go to get away from it all?

In 1943, Europe was in conflict. Which meant Winston Churchill was labouring under the enormous pressure of leading Britain through those dark days.

Yet, in the midst of the horror and confusion, there was still one haven of light and tranquility to which he could renire, albeit briefly, to relax and take stock; Morocco.

Where, in the lush and beautiful gardens of the world famous La Mamounia Hotel in Marrakesh, this great statesman and painter, too tired to even lift a brush, could stand with President Roosevelt and watch the sun set over the Atlas mountains. Who knows what effect this sight had upon them. But one thing is certain.

Today Morocco still offers the perfect opportunity to get away from it all. In whichever way you prefer.

Developing Morocco's cultural and economic resources

Casablanca

If you knew Casablanca 20 years ago and were to return today, you would be pleasantly surprised to find how a town can develop and undergo major changes and yet not lose its identity and its human dimension.

Rapid growth has always been a feature of Casablanca, but this has never destroyed its halance. It is an industrial town and a major financial center, but it is also a tourist town which has its own special charm.

If businessmen choose to locate their head offices there, it is because it has most of the advantages of a city with few of the disadvantages. Its reputation as a conference and con-gress town has already been amply demonstrated and business tourism is constantly growing.

Hence Casablanca has become the economic capital of the kingdom of Morocco. It fills a special position not just as the hub of its region but also within the life of the nation: currently it is an area of open demographic and economic concentration, thanks to a hinterland which has yet to be developed.

But despite all of this, Casablanca is not saturated. His Majesty King Hassan II wanted the town to develop and yet to remain master of its own development.

This is why it has been given an administrative structure which is original but which has the lofty mission of making it a model town, one that must jealously preserve its historical and cultural legacy. It is from this perspective that a major, totally integrated development plan has been specially conceived for this city so that it may welcome the 21st century with quiet confidence.

All the infrastructural features currently being studied will certainly be in place within the near future, including hundreds of hectares of green areas, a large theatre, a new fair, a modern underground railway system, bus stations, leisure parks and extensions to the port and airport. To preserve a balance, the spiritual dimension will find its concrete expression in the great mosque of Hassan II currently being built. This will be an architectural gem of the modern age.

RAD and its vital services, which are financially autonomous, are actively participating in providing the infrastructure and equipment for La Wilava in Greater Casablanca to meet the demands created by the socio-economic development of the region.

Among the projects partly financed by BIRD are: • The rehabilitation of the drinking water network. Investments in the order of 3 billion dirhams are scheduled for the programme of electrical installations.

The foreign currency spent on rehabilitating the network would be about US$13 million. The program for short, medium and long-term sanitation calls for rehabilitation of the network, new work on infrastructure, the tertiary network, the purchase of material, anti-pollution equipment, etc. The investment needed to implement this programme, scheduled between 1988 and 2005, is estimated at 5.67 billion dirhams.

Tangiers

A link between Europe and Africa, Tangiers is a model magnetic pole between Africa, Europe and the Americas, a crossroads of trade between Asia, the Middle East, the Iberian peninsula and Africa, gateway to Morocco where history has remained authentic, where man and nature have joined together harmoniously, where ancestral traditions have remained untouched.

With a climate that makes it simultaneously Mediterranean and oceanic, Tangiers very much deserves its name as a coastal resort with fine beaches and woodland. It is both traditional and modern, a city of sunshine and sea.

It has a geographically privileged position in the far north-west of Morocco and Africa, while its location on the Straits of Gibraltar puts it close to Europe and could be very useful to it economically and socially, especially if the fixed link project comes to fruition.

Its topography comprises low flatlands and hills extending from the Western Riff mountains. Irregularity of flow characterizes its watercourses. Annual precipitation can reach 800 to 900 millimeters but is concentrated into five months from November to March. The annual average temperature is 17°C with a prevailing east wind. From a demographic point of view, the population of the province is estimated at 509,000, with an average growth rate of 3.9 per cent against 2.6 nationally.

Agriculture

Out of a total surface area of some 12,000 hectares, the cultivable area is around 80,000 hectares, the bulk of it privately owned. Cereals very much dominate, with 35,000 hectares of hard wheat, soft wheat and barley.

Fodder crops are also grown, as are pulses and special crops such as ground nuts: seasonal market gardening and the agricultural potential of the Province has been outlined in a document entitled tence of a port, to an international airport "Study for integrated agricultural de-velopment project," for which the general studies have been completed.

The increased number of these units, thanks to the crea-tion of an industrial estate, has without doubt brought new blood into the development of the Province.

Despite the current state of the market. applications for these sites continue to pour into this province and development of a second stage of this industrial area is clearly a matter of urgency.

Metallurgy, electricity and mechanical engineering; textiles and leather; agribusiness; and chemicals and para-chemicals are projects that have been implemented in Tangiers. Textiles represent a third of a activities in the area.

Agriculture

The priority given to developing the agriral sector is a result of the important place which it occupies in the national economy.

Marrakech

More than 62 per cent of the population earn their living from agriculture directly or indirectly. The area of cultivable land is 555,000 hectares, of which 371,000 hectares are devoted to cereals. Three types of tree dominate the orchards: olive (47,000 hectares). apricot (16,000 hectares) and almond (89,000

Agadir

Agadir occupies a central position, linking the oorth and the south. This city constitutes a fulcrum of economic development, a metropolis of territorial balance; it is the capital of the economic region of the south, which numbers 11 provinces.

Not until the post-war economic boom did the economy of Agadir develop and then, on 29 January 1960, 85 per cent of the town disappeared as a result of a powerful earth tremor which daimed almost 20,000 victims. On the day after this terrible catastrophe, the late King Mohamed V ordered the reconstruction of the town and put the heir to the throne, King Hassan II, in charge of the operation.

The population has grown from 16,695 inhabitants in 1961 to 115,000 in 1982. with an average growth rate of 9.9 per cent. There are two factors behind this trend: natural growth and immigration.

From a geographical point of view, Agadir is 60 per cent mountainous terrain, with the High Atlas to the north. The remaining 40 per cent is flatland, with the plain of Souss to the east and the plaio of Massa to the south.

The climate is mild, especially along the coast where the cold sea current from the Canary Islands gives a clement temperalure range of between 20°C and 27°C.

Tourism

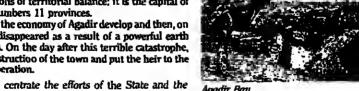

Agadir's privileged geographical location and favorable weather conditions make it currently the prime focus of tourism in the kinstom

In terms of accommodation, 22 per cent of all beds available are established in Agadir and hotel capacity has grown constantly since 1965 to reach 14,479 beds in 1987. Moreover, the tourist industry is destined for considerable development according to studies on the development of the tourist industry carried out by Sonaba.

Agadir's hinterland offers enormous potential for tourism and is attracting the interest of tour promoters on this score, Taghazot is regarded as a prime site for the future development of the tourist industry in Agadir.

The provincial authorities are aware of the importance of organizing the sector to achieve better presentation and management of their product Agadir, and have taken steps to bring together professionals within a provincial committee so that their actions can be sensibly coordinated. Because of the major advantages enjoyed by the region the agricultural sector is expecting extraordinary expansion, thanks to the rapid spread of growing in greenhouses, the introduction of new crops and the use of very modern methods of inigation.

Despite the decidedly touristic character of the town, Agadir forms the industrial focus for all the economic region of the south, where agribusiness and fishing industries predominate, due to the diversity of its agricultural and marine wealth.

Agadir has more than 200 production units, including 21 fish canning factories, producing 190,000 metric tons per annum and nine factories for byproducts producing 690,000 metric tons.

Two important industrial areas are currently being developed (Tassila and Ait Melloul) and will contribute to the recovery of the industrial sector in the province. Alongside modern industry, we must not forget the development of traditional crafts. They are linked mainly to the dynamism of the tourist industry and especially feature leatherwork, carpetmaking, tapestry, woodwork and weaving. Agadir is the second airport in Morocco after Casablanca as regards number of passengers and there are plans for a second major airport in the province.

The location of the town of Fez at the meeting point of three great natural features - the Rif mountains, the Middle Atlas mountains and the plateau of Sais - gives it a great natural diversity

To the north it is girded by two mountains: Zalagh and Tghat. Stretching out to the west is the eastern end of Saïs, a plain situated between 350 and 500 meters above sea level. This area drains into a large network of little streams which run through the town and into the sebou.

Fez enjoys a temperate semi-continental climate and average annual precipitation of 600 illimeters, with an average of 84 rainy days a year. There is more or less regular snowfall in the hinterland at heights above 1,200 meters. Large areas of forest form a natural stockade around the town. The most widespread species are holm oak (50 per cent of the province's forested area), thuya (22 per cent), cedar (48 per cent), Pine (2 per cent) and alfa (1 per cent); the remainder (21 per cent) is made up of a great variety of species.

The setting of these forests is greatly enriched by vast water resources, with many lakes and springs offering pleasant excursions and opportunities for hunting and fishing.

Fez is also renowned for its thermal springs. The spa of Moulay Youcoub, has very hot sulphurous, radioactive waters which are used to treat rheumatism and skin, gynaecological and ENT complaints. The spa at Sidi Harazem is characterized by natural mineral water bearing sodium, bicarbonate, calcium and magnesium. It is believed to help in treating illnesses of the kidnews and urinary tract.

Industry

Economic activity in Fez can be broken down into: A crafts sector which provides low-

At the same time, the town boasts many training establishments such as: the multidiscipline university, the University Institute of Technology, the Institute of Apolied Technology, the Institute of Leather and Textiles, technical training centres for Urban Planning, Architecture, Building, Civil Engineering, the Hotel School, the Higher Institute for Information Technology and Management and many centers for professional qualifications.

This economic framework could not have been strengthened without sustained input from the work force, nor without feminine savoir faire. Moroccan women have thus become both an important factor in development and a dynamic component in the family and social cell, drawing inspiration and guidance from fundamental Arabo-Muslim norms and values.

This season the list begins with the orchestra's 70-year-old laureate conductor, Bernstein, and runs through such moderately likely or totally unlikely suspects as Gunther Herbig, Erich Leinsdorf, Raymond Leppard, Kurt Masur, Leonard Slatkin, Sir Georg Solti, Klaus Tennstedt, Hugh Wolff and Giuseppe Smopoli.

Of those, this better might place a dollar or two, without great confidence, on Tennstedt and Masur, both Germans, or the American-born Slatkin. Wolff is talented, but still a little green. Not out of the picture, perhaps, are such names as Daniel Barenboim, Charles Dutoit and Esa-Pekka Salonen.

Western Loans to Soviets Provide Little Leverage

By PETER PASSELL New York Times Service

After Bank Deal, EW YORK --- Will Mikhail S. Gorbachev try to shore up support at home with foreign-financed consumer imports? In the past three years Soviet hard-currency debts have nearly doubled. And in the past few weeks the Soviet Union has negotiated lines of credit exceeding $9 abilion, setting off speculation that desperate Soviet leaders were about to stop worrying about foreign debt and learn to love

Appearances may be deceiving, however. Most of the rise in Soviet debt since 1984 has been an accounting artifact of changes in exchange rates. The Soviets have not borrowed much more, but they do owe a lot more (in dollars) because most of their

The Soviets may debts must eventually be repaid in appreciated European have obtained credits Similarly, the new lines of credit may be less than meets the eye. Soviet trade officials order to stimulate a -may have negotiated credits in bidding war. Western capitals that they have no intention of using, in order to stimulate a bidding war for Soviet business.

Still, watchers of perestroika, or restructuring, do not doubt that Mr. Gorbachev is holding his high-import card in reserve or that the Soviet economy has the capacity to carry a far larger foreign debt. The tough question is whether it will serve Western interests to link further extensions of credit to political change. The pressure on the Kremlin to increase consumer imports is Ine pressure on the Kremun to increase constinue imports is indoubtedly building. Plans to allow bankrupt enterprises to fail and hints that subsidies on consumer staples must soon be reduced have threatened the traditional security of Soviet work-ers. But the leadership has yet to show that the added risk of memployment and higher prices will pay off for Soviet consum-

Perversely, Mr. Gorbachev seems intent on undermining his own position. Last year he pressed his anti-alcohol campaign just as he was disclosing plans for restructuring the economy.

HE REDUCTION in sales of beavily taxed vodka, which used to absorb one-sixth of all private purchasing power, has left Soviet consumers with a lot more rubles in their pockets but little more to buy. The result: a sense that perestroika means longer lines and emptier shelves.

No conceivable quantity of imports would be sufficient to relieve the inflationary pressure built through years of forced savings. But a taste of glitzy, foreign-designed goods might at least give a skeptical population the sense that perestroika was more than just another set of slogans. That might buy time for embattled economic reformers.

How much more debt could the Soviet Union afford to service? A lot more. The current $25 billion debt could probably be paid off overnight from the Soviet Union's gold boldings, which Jan Vanous of PlanEcon, a newsletter on East European economies, estimated to be worth $33 billion. In recent years, moreover, the Soviet Union has run huge current account surpluses with the nonsocialist world. As Mr. Vanous notes, Soviet debts to the West have increased only because arms are being sold on credit. Admittedly, Soviet export earnings are tied uncomfortably tightly to sales of oil and gas. Another fall in energy prices would pinch. But it is also true that the Soviet economy is notoriously wasteful of fuel. The discipline of cost-based pricing could lead to dramatic increases in fuel efficiency, quickly freeing resources for export growth ... In any case, the Soviet Union now uses just 17 percent of its export earnings to service its long-term debt. A tripling or quadrupling of that percentage would hardly delight creditors. If Puat of Malaysia. See SCENE, Page 15

BUSINESS/FINANCE

But the airline is no joke. It has become a financial success, and Mr. Branson, a 38-year-old rock music record tycoon, might soon follow his original instinct. He is once again considering using riffraff for what he calls the "boring" name of economy class,

Since its inauguration in 1984, Virgin Atlantic has flown between London's Gatwick Airport and Newark, New Jersey, Flights between London and Miami soon followed, as did a limited number of flights from Britain to other European countries.

The airline began its trans-Atlantic flights with two leased Boeing 747s, which it has since purchased. It still uses two leased Vickers Viscount 800s for the European flights.

Now it is about to lease four more 747s, Mr. Branson said. Service between London and Los Angeles is expected to begin next year, as are flights from London to Tokyo and to New York's Kennedy Airport.

The airline got its name from Virgin Group PLC, Mr. Branson's leisure and entertainment conglomerate, which has businesses ranging from travel and publishing to records and video. He chose the name when he went into business as a teen-ager, because be thought it was "an appropriate name for someone inexperienced in business."

Virgin Group's shares were first sold to the public and began trading in November 1986. But now Mr. Branson and a group of other managers are buying up the shares outstanding and taking the company private once more. The transaction is expected to be completed in January.

The buyback, announced in early October, followed a generally poor performance in the share price that was hundering the group's plans for further acquisitions,

The parent group bas also run into difficulties with its 45 percent bolding in Super Channel, a British satellite television station, which has been losing money since it began operations last year. This week, Betatelevision SpA of Italy acquired 53 percent of the station,

As for the airline, problems have arisen because t has so few planes. Flights have been delayed and even canceled when mechanical or other difficulties have occurred. But Mr. Branson said that of the six 747s he expects the airline to be operating next year, one will be used exclusively as a backup.

In the beginning, Virgin Atlantic had an image problem, according to Mr. Branson. Because it frequently offers live entertainment on its trans-Atlantic runs and because its owner is one of the world's largest record producers — with a roster of rock and pop stars that includes Phil Collins, Boy George and about 200 others — Virgin Atlantic quickly acquired the reputation of being a rock 'n' roll airline.

And, because of its discount fares, travelers associated Virgin Atlantic with Laker Airways of Britain, which went bankrupt in 1982, and with People Express of the United States, which also is now defunct. Both carriers were deep discounters that offered few comforts. "In the second week that we were in business,"

Mr. Branson recalled, "I flew to New York and I

Maxwell Selling Up to £1 Billion Worth of Assets

By Warren Getler

val Herald Tribunc LONDON - Maxwell Communication Corp. said Friday that it would sell a major portion of its assets 10 help finance its takeover of Macmillan Inc. The sale of the assets, estimated to be worth up to £1 billion ($1.8 billion), would reduce Maxwell's printing operations but leave it solidly in publishing. On Thursday, Maxwell Communication clincbed a botly contested $2.5 billion takeover of Macmillan. a U.S. publishing and information services giant Robert Maxwell, chairman of Maxwell Communication, said Friday that his company would sell its Britisb commercial printing busi-ness and might spin off its Britisb newspaper printing business, European printing plants and a property portíolio. "In a way, Mr. Maxwell is giving up his industrial birthright because he built himself up to be a printer," said Terry Connor, an industry analyst with the London brokerage James Capel & Co.

Mr. Maxwell, 65, previously indicated that some Maxwell Communication assets would be sold to help finance the takeover. The purchase of Macmillan is his first successful takeover in the United States.

The bulk of the cost of the acquisition is being financed by two lines of credit from European banks, totaling $2.2 billion.

Analysts said the kind of opera-tions being considered for disposal printing assets, Mr. Maxwell apare the core of Maxwell Communication's printing and publishing empire and would go far in transforming the group into a streamlined media concern.

The company said it would sell its Printing & Communication PLC, excluding the unit's newspaper printing business, Britisb Newspaper Printing Corp. The date of the sale was not known.

BPCC's principal activities include commercial printing, namely of books, consumer journals, cbecks, packaging and labeling, and newspaper printing. Mr. Maxwell said that the BPCC management had indicated a strong interest in submitting a buyout offer for the commercial printing operations. "Until today, Maxwell was promoting a one-stop communication

Separately, Mr. Maxwell said Friday that be was seeking prompt completion of an agreed takeover of Dun & Bradstreet's Official Airlines Guide unit through his privately held company. Pergamon

The British company agreed to purchase Official Airlines Guide, a leading travel publication group in the United States, for $750 million cash on Oct. 30, pending sharebolder approval,

NEW YORK - Martin Lipton, the Manhattan lawyer who reportedly received the largest legal fee in history in connection with a corporate merger, has inid clients that the wave of acquisitions will soon cause a stock market crash.

"Our nation is blindly rushing to the precipice," Mr. Lipton wrote in a dire two-page memorandum. "As with tulp bulbs, South Sca bubbles, pyramid investment trusts, Florida land, REITS, LDC loans. Texas banks and all the other financial market frenzies of the past, the denouement will be a crash." REIT stands for real estate investment trust and LDC for less developed countries.

Mr. Lipton, who specializes in defending companies against bostile takeovers, predicted, "We and our children will pay a gigantic price for allowing abusive takeover tactics and boot-strap, junkhand takeovers.

The memo is titled "Is This the End of Takeovers?" It appears on the stationery of Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz and is dated Oct. 28. It is one of the stream of mailings the highly profitable firm of 92 lawyers sends to clients assessing the state of corporate legal affairs. On Tuesday, a newspaper report said Mr. Lipton had billed Kraft Inc. $20 million, or more than $5,000 an bour, for representing the company during two weeks of takeover talks with Philip Morris Cos. Mr. Lipton has refused to comment on his fee. Others involved in the acquisition said he had charged considerably more than $20 million, and one person suggested it was closer to the $30 million fee charged by Kraft's investment adviser, Goldman, Sachs & Co.

Although the memo strongly criticizes the use of high-yield, high risk junk bonds in financing takeovers, Mr. Lipton apparently did not oppose their use in the Philip Morris-Kraft battle. Before the final agreement, Kraft had recommended that shareholders accept a recapitalization plan that called for heavy use of junk bonds.

ROME - The public offer-ing of 13.2 percent of the Italian state merchant bank Mediobanca SpA by its majority shareholders, three Italian state banks, will probably take place from Nov. 21 to 25, banking sources said Friday.

The move will effectively complete the state's partial privatization plan for Medio-

The three state banks -Banca Commerciale Italiana Credito Italiano and Banco di Roma SpA --- are selling a further 5 percent stake in Mediobanca to a private group of investors, which already has 20 percent and is part of the bank stockholders' syndicate. A total of 50 percent of Mediobanca shares will be beld by individual investors once the sale is completed. The remaining 50 percent will be evenly divided between the group of private investors and the three state banks. The share sale price will be based on the stock's average market price over the 15 trading sessions preceding the start of the sale, less 4 percent. The private investors will pay 12 percent more than the public for their shares, sources said. The conditions and timing

MCI is the second largest long-distance com-pany in the United States, after AT&T.

MCI said its oew oetwork, called MCI Fax, would transmit facsimiles on fiber-optic lines to insure the quality of images. The Fax oetwork would be separate from MCI's voice and data AT&T and U S Sprint Communications Co., which carry facsimile transmissions on their voice networks, said they did oot plan to offer a parate facsimile network.

Tim Price, MCPs vice president of sales and marketing, valued the facsimile transmission.

market at $3 billion a year and said he expected it to grow to more than $9 billion by 1991. Although MCI now has less than 10 percent of that market, Mr. Price said, the company hopes to double its market share by introducing the new network.

There are more than 1.5 million facsimile machines in the United States, and the number is expected to double this year.

Large business customers generally spread their telecommunications business among several veodors. For example, a major corporation might give 60 percent of its voice traffie - and therefore its facsimile traffic - to AT&T, 30 percent to MCI and 10 percent to U S Sprint.

MCI is hoping to capture the facsimile market by offering the separate network.

The genesis of the pact has been complicated by deep-seated dis-trust on all sides. Businessmen feared the government would launch a majnr new tax package as part of the pact, and threatened to withdraw. Despite the firm resistance of Finance Minister Mailson da Nohrega, some government sectors are known to favor another economic shock package similar to the unsuccessful measures introduced by his two predecessors. R ECALL the first black athlete in a major American sport and memory summons Jackie Robinson as he broke the color bar in major league baseball in 1947. Remember the taunts Robinson endured, the threats, and how for years he bonored his promise not to retaliate but to let his accomplishments respond for him. Major Taylor traveled that road first, a long half-century before Robinson. A forgotten pioneer, Taylor was a champion bicycle racer in a day when the Telewas a champion bicycle racer in a day when the 1cle-gram Trophy Race in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1896 could attract 50,000 spectators, "the biggest crowd ever got together by day light in Worcester," according to a local newspaper. Spalding's Official Bicycle Guide for 1898 summed it up: "Cycle racing occupies as prominent a place in the estimation of the ever-vacillating public as a place in the estimation of the ever-vacillating public as any sport recorded on the calendar." For a handful of years, Taylor dominated the competi-tion. He made triumphant tours of Europe and Austra-lia, defeating all champions there. "The Fastest Bicycle Rider in the World" he could truthfully call his autobiog-raphy, citing the many speed records he set, the world championship he won in 1899 and the U.S. sprint cham-minimize in 1890 and 1000 pionships in 1899 and 1900.

Yet Taylor was virtually an outcast in the sport in the United States because of his color. He would have been forgotten anyway, as all the old champions were forgotten once the track sport went into decline in the 1930s. But a main point made by Andrew Ritchie in this earnest and widely researched study is that Taylor hardly left a trace that he had passed. "Why is Major Taylor's name barely mentioned in the histories of black participation in American sports?" the author asks. "Why has it taken so long for this forgotten black hero to be rewarded with public acclaim?"

Ritchie's answer in part is "the same racism that was Noticities a inswer in part is the same ration in was instrumental in trying to suppress Taylor's accomplish-ments while he was competing continued to suppress the memory of his achievements after his retirement from racing in 1910, at the age of 32." However tendentious this appears to be, Ritchie does show how how how Taylor time offers tensed. Time and show how badly Taylor was often treated. Time and again other riders ganged up against him in races and used economic pressure and bicycling laws to keep him out of competition. Throughout, Taylor turned the other check. "I try to do clean riding without receiving the advantage of anything or from anybody," he wrote in his autobiography, which has been heavily mined by Rit-chie. "I only ask from them the same kind of treatment which I give and am willing to continue to give." Does this sound saintly? That is one word for Major Taylor, who seems almost party a particular Taylor, who seems almost never to used physical or verbal violence against those riders who abused him. He had his own code, did Major Taylor.

had his own code, did Major Taylor. "I always played the game fairly and tried my hard-est," he could rightfully say, "although I was not always given a square deal or anything like it." As Ritchie makes star, not even close to anything like it. Major Taylor is a key figure, of course, in Peter Nye's "Hearts of Lions," a thorough and nicely written history of bicycle racing in the United States. From Mile-a-Minute Murphy to Grag LeMond, the gang's all here. Nye's love of the sport shines through every page. Far, far less knowledgeable than Ritchie and Nye is Jeff Connor, a British reporter, whose "Wide-Eyed and Legless" is an innocent's abroad account of the 1987 Tour de France from the inside of the race, where Tour de France from the inside of the race, where reporters are rarely allowed to penetrate. Covering Brit-an's hapless ANC team, the neophyte Connor found himself sharing the riders' lives and serving as a go-between in continuous bickering. His book is not the hilarious story it would have been if he had understood all that he was seeing, but it is good-natured enough.

Some Games Tests Showed Marijuana

The Associated Press

LAUSANNE, Switzerland - A small number of athletes tested positive for manjuana use at this summer's Olympics but were not penalized, the anti-doping chief of the Games said Friday at the annual meeting of the General Assembly of International Sports Federations. Earlier, two Scandinavian physicians reported what they described as a revolutionary hrealthrough in detecting blood doping in athletes. Drs. Inggard Lereim of Norway and Tapio Videman of Finland said Thursday the tests were 100 percent accurate in detecting use of another person's blood and 50 percent accurate in finding athletes who took transfusions of their own blood.

"We believe this is revolutionary," said Lereim, the physician for the Norwegian Ski Team who has spent six years working on blooddoping detection.

Blood doping, also known as blood packing, involves athletes injecting blood to increase the number of oxygen-carrying red cells

World Cross-Country Ski Champi-onships in Lahti, Finland. The International Olympic Committee has banned hlood dop-

ing, but has said that oo accurate method exists to test for it. The physicians gave no statistics to support their accuracy claims and received a skeptical reception from other conference delegates, who raised questions about violating an athlete's religious code or personal freedom by taking hlood. Prince Alexandre de Merode, head of the IOC's medical commission, said that less than 10 of the 1,601 athletes who underwent urinalysis in Seonl showed signs of marijuana use. It was the first time the IOC had tested for the drug.

There was no indication marijuana was used at the Games. Urinalysis generally detects the drug over several weeks or even months.

Merode refused to disclose the dentities, countries or sports of the athletes.

He said oone of the athletes' names were turned over to national Olympic committees, international sports governing bodies or local authorities.

Possession and use of marijuana is illegal in much of the world, but

Tennis: Peace "If bemoglobin counts are high And Threats

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches LONDON - Organizers of the major tennis tournaments said Friday they had devised a peace plan that, they hoped, would appease the angry players who have decided to run their own circuit.

We remain optimistic, but this must be the final move," said the English Lawn Tennis Association's president, Ron Presley, after a meetng of tournament representatives. He said the representatives were ready to fly to Florida to put their proposals to Hamilton Jordan. head of the Association of Tennis Professionals, which plans to set up its own men's circuit in 1990.

He did oot elaborate on the proposals. But his remarks suggested that the tournament organizers would not join a breakaway circuit. "The Grand Slam and other major tournaments are united in supporting the current system, with a few amendments," Presley said. John McEnroe, the American once ranked No. 1 in the world, said Thursday in Antwerp, Belgium, that "what I would do is put up rival tournaments against the [Grand] Slams and put them in their proper place.

"If you have the top 30 players play in one tournament and none in the Australian Open, that would make the French, Wimbledon and U.S. Open a little nervous," he said at the exhibition European Community Championship. (Reuters, AP)

Glamour and Grime

By Jane Gross New York Times Service C AN FRANCISCO - At a new D Nordstrom department store here, customers can order tea from their dressing rooms or relax after shopping with an herbal body treatment

They can buy custom-blended face powder, dine in a restaurant that serves Louis XIII cognac for $500 a bottle or be entertained by a musician playing the largest piano Steinway makes

But just outside on Market Street glamour collides with grime. On this once grand thoroughfare a women sits cross-legged on the sidewalk singing hymns, a street preacher inveighs against premarital sex and beggars extend their cups to tourists boarding the cable car.

It is this stark contrast thet has made San Franciscans take particular note of their newest department store, the largest in the ex-panding Seattle-based chain.

The Market Street store opened this month with record-breaking sales and a blizzard of news articles. Nordstrom shopping bags have quickly become status symbols, and on Saturday afternoons there are long lines of people in the atrium waiting to board the spiral escalators. In the footwear department, which has prompted a rash of Imelda Marcos jokes, customers stand and gawk at an array of 100,000 pairs of shoes.

San Francisco has a wealth of fancy stores, so one must look elsewhere for an explanation for all this excitement, most breathlessly expressed by Herb Caen, whose daily column in The San Francisco Chronicle is a constant paean to the city's more glorious past. Caen has called the store a "gorgeous gam-ble" and observed that its arrival gives Market Street "an air of the Champs-Elysées."

His counterpart at The Examiner, Rob Morse, begged to differ, characterizing the hullabaloo as an embarrassment "for those of us committed to the notion that San Francisco is a sophisticated city."

Those on both sides of the debate agree that the store is the single most significant change in the city's landscape in many years, the culmination of 20 years of civic effort to reverse the decline of Market Street and consolidate the shabby south-em portion of the city with Union Square, its vibrant retail core,

City planning experts predict that Nordstrom will have profound

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss effects on the neighborhood -driving up rents, forcing out exist-ing merchants and making life increasingly difficult for the homeless who congregate there, near most of the city's shelters and single-room occupancy hotels. This prospect delights Bernard Averbuch, the executive director of the Greater Market Street Association, which over the years has dressed up the area with flower boxes and raised money for increased police protection. Now practically overnight, Averbuch said - the neighborhood's least attractive denizens seem to be get-ting the idea. The homeless are moving elsewhere, and so are the stag theaters and pinball areades.

Equally pleased is Officer Lee Dahlberg, who mans a police kicsk at the cable car turnaround just across the street from Nordstrom Dahlberg helps tourists find their way to the Golden Gate Bridge or Fisherman's Wharf. He helps officials of San Francisco Center, the vertical mall that is home to Nordstrom, chase peddlers from their doorway. And he decides which of the street people are a danger to themselves and others, which to arrest and which to leave alone.

DAHLBERG recalls coming to the area on childhood shopping expeditions, all decked out in a jacket and tie. His dream, he said, is to see the "street bums" give way to "nicely dressed people," to see "the San Francisco I knew as a kid."

That dream is not shared by John Crew, an attorney for the American Civil Libertics Union, who has sued the Police Department three times in the last 10 years over "street sweep tactics," and has twice won changes in procedures. Crew said be was concerned that "these tactics will reappear" because of public sentiment, which could put pressure on the police. "Giving folks the benefit of the doubt, I am sure there are people looking at this store from strictly a business standpoint," Crew said. "But for others, it's Thank God, we can get rid of the homeless. There is a segment of the public that looks at homeless people and searches for some crime to charge them with. I'm extremely skeptical when people say that merely because a store has opened, homeless people have picked up and moved somewhere else,"

International Herald Tribues PARIS - Bette Davis is 80, a frail little woman with hollowed cheeks. She stands on her spindly legs as crect as a grenadier at attention, her eyes alert. She resembles her portrayal on the screen of the haughty Mrs. Skeffington taking the advancing years in her proud stride.

In Paris to promote the French translation of her book "This 'n That" ("Ceci et Cela," Ergo Press-Michel Lafon Editions), she showed her defiance of old age as she talked about the past and the future.

"I'm a true Yankee, a New Enlander," she explained in her hotel suite. "I have inherited the pioncering spirit from my ancestors. Never say die. Determined ambition is my dynamo, and it still operates."

A scout for Universal films proposed and Davis remained at spotted Davis and she was invited studio as one of its top stars for many years. She was offered the role of Mildred, the waitress who wrecks a man's life in a dramatization of Somerset Maugham's novel "Of Human Bondage." It made her the most important young actress in the movies. Though that year's Oscar went to another, she received an Oscar the following year for her work in a much inferior film, "Dangerous." "Action is an often heard word in Hollywood, bot it is often delayed," remarked the veteran actress.

"Many actresses fear to play unsympathetic women," she said.

"I faced that challenge. One doesn't have to be a bitch to play a bitch, but being type-cast as a villainess may injure one's repu-tation. I remember the brilliant little girl who was the destructive menace in 'The Children's Hour.' When the curtain call came there was no applause for her. The audience hated her, believing the viciousness of the part she played so well and forcefully sprang from her own character. She had no future in the theater. In drama, however, bad women have the best of it as far as acting goes. One mustn't draw any figure all black or one falls into caricature

"I played three roles on the screen that Tallulah Bankhead had created on the stage, and in 'All about Eve' my characteriza-tion was suggested by the Bank-head of legend. I had never met

'You've played all my parts but not as well as I did.' 'Miss Bankhead,' I replied, 'I agree with you absolutely.' She cooled off and there was no scene."

Davis is ever on the hunt for good scripts. "I saw 'Driving Miss Daisy' in New York and would be delighted to impersonate its old lady in the film version. Helena Rubenstein, who invented the beauty parlor and made a vast fortune with her cosmetic trade, has always fascinated me.

When she was old an armed burglar entered her bedroom and demanded that she open her safe, She jumped up and shouted at him as he leveled his revolver at her, 'Shoot me! What do I care, I'm 94 and you'll go to the electric chairl' What a scene! When I proposed a screen biography of her, one producer asked "Who cares about the cosmetics industry?" 'Only a hundred million women' I answered
